Slide 17: Which one is the oldest?
Objects from L-R:
Cowbell; Texas; early 20th century
Cowbells are worn by livestock so they cannot run away or wander off without being heard. Bells can be used on any roaming livestock, however, they are referred to as "cowbells" as they are most often used with cattle.

Collector's bell; Paris, France; purchased June 2006
The Eiffel Tower is depicted on this souvenir bell from Paris.

Elephant bell; cast in Jalesar, India; made in India ca. 1960
Mahouts (elephant handlers) hang these heavy brass bells around an elephant's neck so they can locate the elephants when they are out in the jungle. These bells are also used to decorate elephants and make pleasing noises while they walk in the many festival processions in India. This bell was cast in a factory in Jalesar, a small town in the northern Indian state Uttar Pradesh. These bells have been used, with no change in design, since the Mughal period in the 17th century.

Slide 18: Where was this made? Do you think it is heavy or light?
Sad Iron "No. 50" made by Enterprise MFG Co (Manufacturing Company); Philadelphia, PA; ca. 1870s
Made of cast iron with wooden handle. The wooden handle was patented in the United States in 1870 and allowed the user to place the metal iron on a heat source without heating the removable handle. In this instance, sad refers to solid, rather than an emotion, and is believed to suggest the iron is heavier than the older, thinner flat irons.

Made of cast iron with wooden handle. The wooden handle was patented in the United States in 1870 and allowed the user to place the metal iron on a heat source without heating the removable handle. In this instance, sad refers to solid and is believed to suggest the iron was heavier than older, thinner flat irons.

Slide 20: What is in the pictures below? What do they tell you?

Letters displaying postmark, killer bars, and postage stamps; 1984, 1976, 1971

The United States Postal Service uses postmarks to indicate the time and date a package, letter, or postcard was delivered into their care. "Killer bars" (also called "killers," "cancellation," or "obliterators") are the wavy lines or bars following the postmark and covering the postage stamp. They indicate the postage stamp has been used and prevent its reuse. Postage stamps, first used in the United States in the late 1840s, are attached to a letter to indicate the sender has paid the proper postal fee.

Marked size 7 ½

Slide 22: What do you think this is?

Miner's Tin Pail; first used in Shamokin, PA, ca. 1890s

Used as a lunch box, this pail has two separate compartments – the bottom section allowed the miner to store his food in a dust-free area while the top canteen compartment allowed the miners to carry hot coffee or soup with them. Miners often took meat pies, or pasties, for lunch; these pies had a mixture of meat, potatoes, and vegetables encased in a folded pastry shell and did not require the use of utensils to eat.
