A New Kind of War

Cold War influences on American culture after September 11th, 2001

by Victoria Penrose
“This will be a different kind of conflict against a different kind of enemy. This is a conflict without battlefields or beachheads, a conflict with opponents who believe they are invisible.”

- President George W. Bush, Radio Address of the President to the Nation, September 15, 2001.
1993 World Trade Center Bombing

- Same location, same goal
- Terrorist training connections
- Perpetrators quickly apprehended
- Did not match same level of national trauma as September 11th
Oklahoma City Bombing

- Previously the worst terrorist attack on American soil - 168 dead, 650+ injured
- Committed by militia extremist Timothy McVeigh
- Attacks did not spark major policy changes
Pearl Harbor

- Aerial attack - presence of jet fuel
- Pearl Harbor Attack death toll: 2,402
- Attack on military rather than civilian area
- Source of the attack easily determined - tied to a specific state
- America joined an ongoing war
- Full shift into wartime production
Early Cold War

- Period of intense national anxiety
- Idea of a new form of warfare
- Threat of enemy infiltration
- Emphasis on family and the home life as a way to find security
Period of National Anxiety

- The Cold War was the best parallel for the level of anxiety felt by Americans after September 11th.
- Played on nuclear fears
- Ground Zero - the point directly above, below, or at which a nuclear explosion occurs. (Merriam Webster Online), also used to refer to World Trade Center rubble
- Anxiety leads to major policy changes, such as the creation of NASA and Department of Defense during Cold War and the Department of Homeland Security after September 11th
Freedom to Spend

- American consumerism was a show of superiority as well as a way to fend off recession
- Consumerism and capitalism represented important American freedoms
- “Take your families and enjoy life, the way we want it to be enjoyed.” -President George W. Bush, O’Hare Airport, Sept 27, 2001

Home Ownership Rates in 2001 and 2004

Fear of Infiltration

- McCarthyism and the Red Scare
- “Since September 11th, the American people have been an important set of eyes and ears in our investigations.” -FBI Director Bob Mueller
- Terrorism Information and Prevention System (TIPS)
- Anti-Muslim sentiment
- Rise of hate crimes towards those of Arab and Middle Eastern descent

Protectors and Caregivers

- Rising emphasis on complementarian gender roles of a male breadwinner and female caregiver
- Male confidence tied to national confidence
- Rose as a contrast to Soviet gender roles

Hunks and Heroes

- “After a few iffy decades in which manliness was not the most highly prized cultural attribute, men -- stoic, muscle-bound and exuding competence from every pore -- are back.” - Patricia Leigh Brown, “Heavy Lifting Required: The Return of Manly Men,” New York Times, 28 Oct. 2001.

- “In three decades, feminism has done a back flip. Once men in uniform were the oppressors. Now they’re trophy mates.”

Vulnerable Victims

- “It’s hard to imagine a more poignant description of vulnerability” - People Magazine on Lisa Beamer
- Emphasis on motherhood
- Expected to be politically neutral
- Return to clearly defined roles was comforting
Constructing Security

- Focus on home and family life
- Refrain from government criticism
- Strictly enforced stereotypes sort friend from foe
- Surge in American patriotism

Embracing Diversity after September 11th

- “Ultimately, America’s answer to the intolerant man is diversity…” - Robert Kennedy
- We must reexamine how we portray concepts of heroism and patriotism.
- We are a country made great by its freedom and diversity. Let us celebrate those concepts when we remember September 11th.
